

Terms of Reference: Assessment of Democratic Transition Countries in West Africa

A Review of the Transition Process in Burkina Faso

1.0 Overview

The West Africa Democracy Solidarity Network (WADEMOS) is seeking the services of a short-term consultant to undertake political assessment of countries undergoing democratic transitions in West Africa - namely, Burkina Faso, Guinea, and Mali.

This assessment is targeted specifically at the ongoing transition process in Burkina Faso. The study is expected to review efforts and interventions including the roadmap and transition charter deployed by regional and national level stakeholders to restore democracy in the country following the overthrow of the constitution by the military.

2.0 Background

Majority of Africans express dissatisfaction with the processes and outcomes of democratic governance, notwithstanding the overwhelming support for democracy as compared with other alternative systems of government. Against popular expectations that democracy would promote the political and economic well-being of ordinary citizens which could not be attained in the three decades of post-independence authoritarian era, democracy still appears to be benefitting a few people on the continent. Today, the rising socio-economic and security challenges and the rapid expansion of jihadism have eroded public confidence in institutions of democratic governance. In some countries, this has galvanized populist or autocratic movements. In west Africa, this has culminated in a spate of coups at a rate unseen even with the adoption of the Lome Declaration on Unconstitutional Changes of Government and the ECOWAS Protocol on Democracy and Good Governance.

Since the beginning of 2019, the region has suffered 8 coups (five successful and three failed). Two in Mali (2020 and 2021), one in Guinea (2021), and two in Burkina Faso (January 2022 and September 2022). Most of the coups have been greeted with joy as expressions of dissatisfaction with their governments to deliver good governance and in the hope that the country's military leaders would drive out corruption and put down jihadist attacks that have killed thousands.

ECOWAS, in attempts to restoring democracy and good governance, has introduced knee-jerk reactions against the military juntas in the coup countries, demanding a return or transition to civilian rule as soon as possible. Guinea, Mali, and Burkina Faso's military juntas after several negotiation efforts led by the ECOWAS mediation team, and complemented by civil society and socio-political movements have unveiled transitional timetables, charters, and frameworks to steer these countries back to constitutional order, in accordance with the ECOWAS and African Union protocols and decisions.

WADEMOS, a transitional civil society pro-democracy support network seeks to undertake situational analysis of countries in transition in West Africa. The assessment will inform WADEMOS' advocacy and engagement within the countries concerned and further support transition efforts with a special focus on constitutional and electoral reforms.

3.0 Scope of Work

The West Africa Democracy Solidarity Network is engaging, on a short-term consulting basis, a renowned governance expert who has extensive knowledge on the practice of democracy
